TWO GROUPS CHARGE BIAS OF MEDICAL SCHOOLS BY PERSONAL INTERVIEW

Continued use of the personal interview to discriminate against Jewish applicants for admission was charged against medical colleges in New York State by the American Jewish Congress and the New York State Committee on Quality in Education.

A survey conducted by the two organizations showed also that Roman Catholic applicants received more favorable treatment than Protestants, according to Shad Polier, vice president of the American Jewish Congress. Mr. Polier urged the State Department of Education to investigate alleged violations of the Quinn-Ollife Law prohibiting racial or religious discrimination in schools. The report condemned the Cornell University Medical School as the worst offender, according to the New York Times.

The survey sought to study the medical school admission experience of the seventy-two premedical students who had received state scholarships last year and had applied to one or more of the state medical schools in New York. Replies to questionnaires came from sixty-one of the winners — twenty Jews, twelve Protestants, and nine Catholics.

The answers showed that the Jewish applicants had as high a percentage of ultimate success in getting into one or another medical school as had non-Jewish students, but the Jews had to do more shopping around before they were accepted. Up to the time replies were received, all but five Jewish [illegible] winners of scholarships had been accepted by medical college.

Jewish students, however, filed an average of [illegible] applications, while the Catholic students filed 6.0 and the Protestants 3.7.

Mr. Polier said the averages gave a somewhat distorted view because one Catholic student had reported having filed the unusually large number of twenty applications. He said it was more appropriate to compare median rather than average number of applications per acceptance. The medians were 5.5 applications for the Jewish students and three for non-Jews.

Mr. Polier said in a letter to Chancellor John P. Myers of the State Board of Regents that the survey showed the same sort of discrimination as that in a similar study made by the American Jewish Congress a year ago among the 1949 state scholarship winners.

Virtually all the discrimination in the medical schools was laid to the personal interview. The report said that educational qualifications of all the scholarship winners were uniformly high. It said that on the basis of written applications, which do not specify race or religion, admissions officers had found 58 per cent of the Jewish and 52.9 per cent of the non-Jewish applications "impressive enough for interviews to be awarded."

Asserting that removal of race and religious questions from written application forms had not eliminated "the quota system," the report said: "It must be concluded that the interview has replaced the application form, in some schools at least, as a method of ascertaining religion and applying discriminatory quota policies."

The difference between Cornell and New York University Medical Schools in their treatment of Jewish applicants was called "startling" in the report, says the New York Times. Figures showed that of twenty-seven Jewish winners of scholarships who applied for admission at Cornell Medical School, fourteen had interviews and none was accepted. Of thirteen Jewish winners who applied at New York University, twelve had interviews and eighteen were accepted.

The report noted that the difference between the statistical rates of all Jewish and non-Jewish

Says Persecution Must Be Viewed As Crime

Bolstering its argument with a declaration made by U.S. President Benjamin Harrison in 1891, the World Jewish Congress declared that the persecution of minorities must be considered an international crime even if not undertaken in connection with war or preparation for war. The statement was made in a memorandum sent to U.N. Secretary-General Lie for transmission to the International Law Commission now holding its third session in Geneva, Switzerland. The Commission has been instructed by the General Assembly to prepare a draft code of offenses against the peace and security of mankind "indicating clearly the place to be accorded there to the Nuremberg principles."

The WJC memorandum, submitted by Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, Adviser on Legal Affairs, and Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, Consultant to the Economic and Social Council, took issue with the conclusion reached at an earlier session of the Commission that the draft code should exclude offenses which had been committed otherwise than in connection with hostilities or with specific war crimes. In other words, the Commission had considered such acts simply as crimes covered by the ordinary law of the country in which they were committed and not as crimes violating international law.

The conclusion, the WJC said, failed to take into account historic precedents in which intervention to counter inhuman persecution of minorities occurred even though peace was not menaced by such acts. As long ago as 1891, it was pointed out, President Harrison in [illegible] against anti-Semitic laws in Tsarist Russia and said: "Banishment whether by direct decree or by not less certain indirect methods of so large a number of men and women is not a local question . . . The suggestion of humanity furnishes ample ground for the remonstrances which have been presented to Russia."

The Law Commission, the WJC memorandum added, also ignored the evolution of international law dealing with protection of human rights since the establishment of the United Nations. The memorandum specifically pointed out that the Genocide Convention adopted by the General Assembly "does not make any distinction between acts committed in time of war or in time of peace" and that, under the General Assembly's Resolution 290 (IV) on Essentials of Peace, serious violations of human rights, no matter where they occur or what their purpose, could be regarded as menacing to international peace.

New Quarterly To Be Forum For All Jews

Publication of a new quarterly magazine, "Judaism," devoted to the religion, ethical and philosophic ideals of Jewish life, will begin in the fall, it was announced in New York by Dr. Robert Gordis, professor of Bible at the Jewish Theological Seminary and chairman of the board of editors, and Rabbi Irving Miller, president of the American Jewish Congress.

Rabbi Miller and Dr. Gordis both emphasized that the publication will be unique in that, instead of being dedicated to any one group in American Judaism, it will furnish a forum for Orthodox, Conservative, Reform, Reconstructionists and unaffiliated Jews. While the editors and sponsors expect the magazine to appeal primarily to a Jewish audience, they hope it will be read by a large non-Jewish group as well, since the problems to be discussed will include contemporary matters affecting all peoples.

"The political, economic and military problems of our desperate age are in a deepest sense of reflection of the spiritual malaise and intellectual confusion of our times," Dr. Gordis said. "This recognition explains the quest in many circles for a world-view which will preserve basic moral values as the surest foundations of a democratic society dedicated to the dignity and well-being of man. In this quest, Judaism, the ancestral religion of the Western world, has a unique and vital contribution to make."

Hold Fate Of Refugees Rests On Arab-Israeli Peace

Unrest among Arab refugees from the new state of Israel is increasing rapidly and constitutes a serious threat not only to the peace of the Near East but of the world, United States delegates to the Beirut refugee conference reported.

The conference was sponsored by the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council and was attended by fifty delegates drawn from the Protestant, Anglican, and Orthodox churches of ten nations. Its purpose was to demonstrate the concern of Christians for the refugees and to enlist the aid of the Christian community in alleviating their condition.

A statement of policy approved by the conference and made public by the United States delegates urged a prompt settlement of political differences between Israel and the Arab states, continued assistance to the refugees by the United Nations and voluntary agencies and a program to make possible the return of some refugees to their former homes and the resettlement of others in existing communities where they could be absorbed into the population.

The conference, which sent delegates to make first-hand inspections of refugee camps, declared it was shocked by the conditions prevailing there. At present there are about 750,000 refugees scattered in camps in five countries bordering on Israel. About 10 per cent are Christians, the others Moslems.

"They have suffered grievous physical and material losses but their mental, moral and spiritual hurt has perhaps been even greater," the conference statement said.

[illegible] responsibility for the present situation is divided among many nations and groups, including Christians, the conference found. Like refugees elsewhere, the displaced Palestinians are victims of a catastrophe for which they themselves are not responsible, it was said.

"We are convinced that there can be no permanent solution of the problem of the Palestinian refugees until there is a settlement of the outstanding political differences between the Arab states and Israel, the conference said. "Churches are not competent to lay down the lines of a political solution. It is the duty of all governments in cooperation with the

Assails Arms Aid To Arabs From U. S., Britain

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel said in Chicago, Ill., that his nation was the strongest military power in the Middle East, apart from Turkey, that was capable of fighting "for human liberty and democracy."

At the same time, the 65-year-old ranking Israeli official declared that the Arab nations were receiving arms from Britain, and "also from this country." He warned that "even a child in the Middle East knows well that Egypt or Iraq or Syria or Lebanon or Saudi Arabia will never lift a finger either for or against the United States, either for or against Russia, and if they will use their arms it will be only against us."

Mr. Ben-Gurion emphasized the imperative necessity for the strengthening of his nation's defense "for our sake, for the sake of those who are there, for the sake of the entire Jewish people and for the sake of human liberty." He said that his nation, which recently celebrated its third anniversary, was now stronger than two years ago, reports the New York Times.

Israel's three major problems, he said, were defense, immigration, and colonization. On defense he referred to the war in Palestine three years ago, saying: "We defeated our enemies but we are not yet secure; our neighbors refuse to make peace with us and they are being strengthened."

The Prime Minister said that his country adhered strongly to a policy of unlimited immigration "because, otherwise, it would be a betrayal of our entire history." He said that any limitation upon immigration "would be a denial of the reason for the establishment of the Jewish state."

American Jewish Committee Reports Iron Country Terrorism Of Jews

Jews in Poland, Hungary, and Rumania have been largely pauperized by the Communist regimes in those countries and are now being subjected to a reign of terror aimed at eradicating Zionist sentiment and discouraging emigration to Israel, the American Jewish Committee reports.

Large numbers of Jews have been arrested in these countries and put to forced labor. The few Jewish organizations permitted by the Governments of Poland, Hungary and Rumania have been repeatedly purged in efforts to remove officers or members suspected of Zionist sympathies.

Jewish religious life in these countries is under the rule of Communist officials and has deteriorated seriously along with Jewish communal organizations. Jewish schools and other cultural institutions have also declined sharply in number.

The large number of Jews in these countries formerly engaged as small business men, artisans, and professional workers have been expropriated in many cases and reduced to common laborers. Lacking skills, they have difficulty finding new jobs and such employment as they do find is frequently of the least remunerative kind. In Hungary only the relief activity of the Joint Distribution Committee saves thousands of Jews from the most desperate economic situation, reports the New York Times.

Agitation against Zionism and against emigration to Israel is the chief task assigned such Jewish organizations as are permitted to exist. The remaining Yiddish newspapers devote much of their space to propagandizing reports about the difficult conditions of life in Israel and to assailing that [illegible] and Sionism [illegible] agents of "American warmongers." Some Jews who have returned after having been in Israel are being used extensively to promote this sentiment.

Almost a half million Jews remain in these countries, more than half of them in Rumania, about 150,000 in Hungary, and roughly 40,000 in Poland. About 26,000 Jews left Poland in the last year and a half. Hungary has prohibited emigration except for a small number of persons having relatives in Israel and some miscellaneous categories. Many Jews have been arrested for seeking to leave the country illegally while others do succeed. Doctors, engineers, and architects are not allowed to leave Poland.

The content of propaganda being directed at Jews in these countries is indicated by this statement made by the former head of the Central Committee of Jews in Poland: "We must strive to inspire our children with the spirit of the North Koreans so that they may grow up to be fearless fighters, ready to sacrifice themselves for Socialism and Peace." Loyalty to Communism, opposition to Jewish nationalism, and hatred the West are the chief themes in this propaganda.

Expropriated and pauperized Jews in Hungary have been forced into black marketing and speculative activities because of their inability to integrate themselves into the new Communist economy after losing their old positions. As a result they form a large percentage of Hungarians arrested for violating the economic laws existing in that country.

Efforts to "productivize" the Jews in Hungary and Rumania by giving them jobs in nationalized industry or elsewhere have been only indifferently successful, in part because of discrimination against known Zionists. Lack of

Social Notes — Montreal

Miss Molly Weisbloom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Weisbloom, de Bullion Street, and Irving Pecker, son of Mrs. H. Epstein, of New York, and the late M. Pecker, of Montreal, whose marriage will take place on June 24, at Chevra Kadisha Synagogue, were entertained at dinner and the theatre by Mr. and Mrs. F. Paul, Mount Royal Avenue East.

Mrs. S. Fischler, Bloomfield Avenue, was hostess at a luncheon at La Maisonnette Carol, with about thirty guests present, in honour of Miss Roslyn Migicovsky, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Migicovsky, Wilderton Avenue, and fiancee of her nephew, David Fischler, only son of Isaac Fischler, of Havana, Cuba, and the late Mrs. Mary Fischler. A centrepiece of carnations and gladioli formed the floral decoration. Mrs. Fischler wore a navy-blue taffeta dress, designed with V-neckline, full skirt, and a white straw hat. Mrs. Migicovsky was in a navy-blue suit, with matching straw hat. The honouree wore a white and black silk print dress, with matching bolero, and a straw hat trimmed with sea-shells. Her corsage was of white gardenias. Silver candlesticks were presented. The marriage will take place on June 14, at the Mount Royal Hotel.

Mrs. Ben. Fagen, Grand Boulevard, entertained about ninety guests at a tea presentation of a cheque, at Ruby Foo's, to honor Miss Sylvia Schreiber, daughter of M. Schreiber, Querbes Avenue, and the late Mrs. Schreiber, whose marriage to Mac Shrier, brother of the hostess, and son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Shrier, Champagneur Avenue, will take place on June 21, at the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue. Mrs. Fagen wore a navy-blue crepe dress, with white ribbon and rhinestone trimming, fashioned with a high round neckline, and draped skirt, and had a white straw hat, trimmed with navy-blue; and a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. I. Grundman, Van Horne Avenue, sister of the bride-elect, wore a navy-blue crepe dress, with a V-shaped neckline, trimmed in white and navy-blue stripes, and a red straw hat, and corsage of red carnations. Mrs. Shrier, mother of the groom-elect, wore a navy-blue crepe dress, having a V-shaped neckline and draped skirt, also a white straw hat, trimmed with pink flowers, and corsage of red roses. Miss Schreiber, the honoree, wore an embroidered navy-blue organdy dress, over a full beige taffeta underskirt; cut with a V-shaped neckline, and a headdress of pink roses. Red and white roses composed the tea table centrepiece. Miss Trudi Shrier, of Miami, Florida, sister of the groom-elect, was present.

THE LITTLE PADRE

BY BARNET LITVINOFF

"You've missed a page out, Syd," said Ben quietly.

I was angry at the interruption, for even though I was supposed to be reading to them I was really in a reverie, miles away. At that time none of us could endure the present, continuously, without escape. This was shortly after being taken prisoner in the desert campaign, and I was the only chap with eyes in a roomful of ten blind men.

They were all wounded paratroopers, blinded since a few days past, and I was a stretcher-bearer who had become entangled in a minefield that wasn't supposed to be there, until the enemy picked me up and I was doing my medical duties on the wrong side of the line. Medical duties, that is, of a special kind: not bandaging arms and legs, or taking temperatures, or assisting the M.O. in the theatre, which are usually only a small part of the work of a military nurse.

Most of my day was spent in washing my charges and making drinks for them and straightening their beds, or often just talking, talking of one thing or another to help kill the day; I'd handled all kinds of jobs as a stretcher-bearer, but with those men I had to unlearn a lot of them. Their minds were taut like elastic getting ready to snap; their needs were few but their demands persistent — if they wanted anything they wanted it so badly that you just had to find it for them, no matter what it was. Luckily, the authorities in our Italian field hospital sent over a little wog boy from Benghasi named something like Zachari, to help me keep the work under, and I was pretty well able to cope with them, fanning them and leading them to the latrines, and dishing out the rations and that sort of thing. Which was just as well, because I used to get so disheartened myself, sick of the place and the job and being in the bag and having a tearing bout of diarrhoea that I had to keep a firm grip on my own temper. Then when I'd get hold of a good thriller I'd try my hand at reading aloud, and so forget things for a while. When every thing's slipped to the back of your mind and you are once more in your civvy job you like to think only of the good points in people you knew in the old days, but I must say in our group the only one to keep an even keel and smile all the while was Zachari (who was very pleased with our nickname Johnny, a sort of title the wogs used to give us), and that was understandable, for whereas he could sneak off home to Benghasi every night we just had to stick, day in, day out.

Well, the day this boy named Ben had interrupted my reading we were all feeling the strain rather badly. The day was hot, the tale was dull — not a murder in the first dozen pages — we had had a lot of bickering, and I was aching for a nap and hoping they would all be asleep before long.

"I haven't, you know, Ben," I answered. "I've been reading straight on without turning over, so how could I?"

"Well, it doesn't make sense. Have another look and see whether a page is missing or loose. It's no good falling asleep if you're supposed to be reading to us."

Angry as I was, I said nothing but glanced at the page numbers. Sure enough he was right. A page was missing; they ran from twelve to fifteen.

"It's a rotten tale, so what matter if there is?" suddenly put in another, Wally Smith, whose face, like Ben's, was still full of shrapnel. "The more he leaves out the sooner we'll be shut of it. Syd's no reader anyway—he'd make No Orchids sound like a piece out of the Bible!"

"All right, lads," I said, "I'll pack it in as you've had enough. I reckon we could all do with a wink of sleep."

"The story's all right," Ben protested, "I was enjoying it. Only you should put a bit more life into your reading."

"Then try doing it yourself," Wally snapped, "and we'll have a bit less of your nagging and moaning."

Taken each by himself, I found them decent and manageable. Together they were a mass of jealousies and a strange sort of intrigue, liable to explode in a moment, so that they'd hate each other. They brooded too much, these fellows, full of self-pity and resentment, and now I knew Wally and Ben were in deadly earnest. The game of blind man's buff was over.

"And don't poke fun at the Bible," said Ben tensely, as an afterthought. "I respect what it says and won't hear your offensive opinions."

Wally had by this time regarded the incident as more or less closed, but now he turned in Ben's direction, saying: "Maybe you're the sky-pilot type, Ben, but for me the Bible's a mas of hypocrisy and lies. I'd sooner believe the stories in Comic Cuts, so you can take it and bury yourself with it, together with all the rubbish that masquerades as Christianity."

"I'm not a Christian," Ben answered, "I'm a Jew."

"That explains it then — and you too!"

"What about a nice brew of the best Italian coffee!" I butted in quickly. "Johnny's getting it ready so we can save our throats as well as our souls." I was worried, but left them with their thoughts and watched Johnny at work, pretending to myself I'd healed the breach but knowing full well that each of them was storing up a sense of grievance.

Johnny was one of the nicest wogs I ever saw. Unlike those Cairo ragamuffins who wanted ten bob to clean your boots and then tied your laces together as they ran off with your wallet he had a clear look about him and two little black eyes like buttons and his wrinkle of a nose screwed up whenever you looked at him — he never passed a glance by but was ready to smile back as he scurried around trying to be helpful. He wore a little skull cap like the rest of them, but his was a pretty extravagant affair intertwined with gilt thread, and he broke the monotony of native apparel by covering his white robe with an army issue drill shirt, with the cuffs flapping and a cavalry flash on the shoulder, discarded probably by a tank-man in the last push.

He really was very good to us, though he needn't have been, for when you get captured you pretty well become a wog yourself. Johnny spent hours staring at my lads, caressing their brows and driving away the flies, and as they muttered in the delirium of a midday sun I could see he was furious with himself at not knowing English so he could talk to them as I did, and tell them how sorry he was they were blinded and that perhaps soon they would be sent to a real hospital where maybe a real doctor could operate and give them their eyes back. If ever there was a human who knew pity and tried to show it in simple little things it was he, and all day long he passed them drinks of water so that if their eyes were clotted dry at least their mouths would never be parched. I felt he had many of the traits of a faithful animal, and in many respects he had the same uses.

Johnny's goodness and the argument I'd just heard set me wondering about religion. I'd met fellows in the army who carried a prayer-book in their haversacks and spoke a tidy language, and it seemed to me something best kept in the far recesses of your mind. If wogs could be noble like that and a religious argument cause a rift between men so pathetically afflicted that they must rely on someone else for every human need, I felt cynical about its benefits. There were times, I thought, when a man was entitled to some reward for his faith, and here were sufferers crying out for consolation no mortal hand could give.

I discovered now how sensitive the blind were; neither Ben nor Wally could be tactful with the other but sensed an unfriendly presence where they could not see a good-humoured or forgiving face. In the days following I had to be careful if I sat and chatted with Ben for a while — I'd have to do the same with Wally and for an equal period of time. They were becoming a problem, those two. If Ben asked to go to the latrine Wally decided at that moment he'd like a walk in the exercise-yard; and if Wally fancied a brew of coffee you could be sure Ben would ask me to read to him. They didn't realise how far they were going in all this, so completely had they forgotten we all inhabit the same world. I was waiting for a first-class crisis.

It happened when Ben asked me what the date was. When I told him he lay quiet without saying a word for a long time, and then I could hear him sob and moan as they would on occasions, trying to shed tears that could not come.

"What's wrong, Ben?" I enquired.

"It's a long story," said Ben.

ORT Director In Germany Is Christian Woman

Directing ORT work in Germany for the last two years is a Christian woman from America, Mrs. C. Dorothea Greene. Because of her great interest in Jewish matters, most people don't notice that she doesn't look Jewish. Though born in Louisiana, Mrs. Green lived in Schenectady, N. Y., most of her life. Active for a long time in the National Youth Administration, whose purpose it was to facilitate the vocational and professional training of young people, when former Governor Herbert Lehman headed UNRRA, Mrs. Greene was asked to go to Egypt to work in the Greek and Yugoslav refugee camps, in order to take care of the vocational training of the young people there. She spent some time in Egypt and also visited Palestine many times. (There were a number of Greek refugees in Palestine.)

Later she went to London and in September 1945, went to Germany, where she carried on the same kind of work for UNRRA. Here she first became acquainted with the tireless organizer of ORT activities in Germany, Agronomist Oleiski, a Lithuanian Jew, who survived the Kovna Ghetto and Dachau, and was before the war, the most active ORT leader in Lithuania. He is now ORT director in Israel. She also met another ORT leader from America, the late Dr. Lvovitch. Learning the aims and activities of ORT, she helped to supply the newly organized school with necessary machines and instruments.

In June, 1949, at Dr. Lvovitch's request, she took over ORT work in Germany and Austria. Throwing herself into the work with energy and devotion she became a mother for every ORT student. They came to her with all their problems and Mrs. Greene, who was unable to speak any language other than English, quickly developed a hybrid tongue combining English, Yiddish, Polish and German. It is a language that has, as yet, no name, a sort of jargon. But it was, after all, a language of the heart, of understanding, of a mother, a language of humanity.

Mrs. Greene says that she had no knowledge of Jews or anything Jewish until she was twenty. But now she is a Jewish leader, gives reports to, and holds counsel with, Jewish leaders from the Joint Distribution Committee, the Jewish Agency, representatives from Israel, consulates in Munich and with the HIAS. Being concerned about the emigration of her students, she became a one-woman migration office. She had thousands of good friends in all parts of America to whom she appealed for "contracts" for emigration candidates. Very quickly the requested "contracts" were arriving, mostly from non-Jewish families. To date, she says, she has received 1,400 "contracts", which permitted thousands to migrate to America. Sending Jews to Washington, Louisiana, and other parts of the United States, many of them were received by Christian families.

Putting her concept of ORT's significance into words, she says, "Our purpose was first to give them faith and confidence, and then, to reshape once again, keep their bodies busy. We taught the Jewish youth to come back to life, to stand on their own feet, and we were successful. Our faith in the human spirit did not let us down."

So she recounts many moving stories about her experiences, which illustrate how people "came back". One young Jewish man, who lost both of his legs was, with great difficulty, convinced that he should go to the ORT school in Munich in order to learn a trade from which he would be able to draw an income in Israel and not become a burden on others. The young man, very confused and embittered because of his tragic fate, asked that they leave him alone, since, he cried, "Who needs a cripple like myself. What can I learn in my unhappy state?"

With patience and understanding, they finally convinced him to take a course. Every morning they took him to the Munich school where he sat on a tall chair, so that he could reach the sewing machine, and they started teaching him leather-working. He quickly conquered his inferiority complex and studiously learned the trade. He sat with a cloth covering his knees, so that people should not see his handicap. Today in Israel, he is working at his trade. He is still an invalid in body, but not in spirit.

Mrs. Greene came to ORT simply to help in the vocational training of the uprooted. Her interest in Jews became ingrained. She is Jewish to the extent that she has more than mere understanding for Jewish suffering and needs. She feels it deeply and identifies with the people.

A story told in pictures is a valuable aid in teaching, whether the student is old or young. Filmstrips on health subjects, produced by the Department of National Health and Welfare, are available to schools, study groups and associations, in either English or French. The National Film Board representative in any province should be reached for information on these filmstrips.

CLASS IN COOKERY

STRAWBERRY CREAM SPONGE CAKE

one cup cake flour
one teaspoon baking powder
one-quarter teaspoon salt
one cup sugar
two teaspoons lemon juice
six tablespoons hot milk
three eggs

Sift flour once before measuring, add baking powder and salt, then sift again three times. Beat eggs with rotary beater until very thick and light (almost white), for about ten minutes; add sugar gradually, beating constantly, then lemon juice; fold in flour, small amounts at a time, and add milk, mix quickly and thoroughly until batter is blended; turn into two nine-inch layer pans, very lightly greased at the bottom, and bake in 350 degree oven for about twenty to twenty-five minutes. Invert on rack until cold, then remove from pans.

Filling

one-half pint whipping cream
one pint-box fresh strawberries

Beat whipping cream stiff. Mix washed and cut strawberries in with cream. Spread one-quarter of mixture between cake layers, and use remainder for top and sides of cake.

Mrs. M. Shefsky,

45 Thome Crescent, Toronto.

ROUMANIAN STRUDEL

For the dough, mix together two cups flour, with one cup lukewarm water, beating well. Mix together with fingertips, or flat part of silver knife, until smooth, for about ten minutes. Place on floured board, or cloth, and cover with a bowl, leaving dough for about two hours; or put it in refrigerator. Roll dough on floured cloth until it is as thin as possible; and then stretch it by hand until it is as thin as tissue paper, and it begins to dry around the edges. Trim off any thick edges. Sprinkle dough with oil, and then spread filling over it, using a mixture of: one-half cup sugar, three tablespoons oil, one-quarter pound shelled, chopped walnuts, one-half cup bread crumbs, grated rind and juice of one orange, and grated rind of one lemon; one-half jar of red and green cherries, one-half cup coconut, and one-half cup raisins. Roll one-pound of Turkish Delight into thin strips, and place it along one end of dough. Fold edge of dough over Turkish Delight, and keep rolling it by lifting cloth gently until dough is one, long, firm roll. Place it on greased cookie sheet, and bake for about twenty minutes in a 350-degree oven. When cool, sprinkle with sifted icing sugar; and cut into pieces.

Mrs. R. Mitchell,

3679 St. Famille Street, Montreal.

Silver Feted In Tel Aviv

Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, of Cleveland, Ohio, former chairman of the executive of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, ended his visit in Tel Aviv and returned to the United States. The American Zionist leader was feted throughout his stay by the General Zionist Opposition party, but was snubbed by the Government, with which he has been in conflict since Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion backed American non-Zionists like Henry Morgenthau Jr. against Rabbi Silver in their dispute over control of the United Jewish Appeal.

The Tel Aviv Municipal Council, which is controlled by the General Zionist party, made Rabbi Silver an honorary member of the city. The main theme of the series of speeches made by Rabbi Silver was that the World Zionist Organization had not completed its function with establishment of the Jewish State of Israel. He stressed that a powerful Zionist movement still was imperative to give political and economic support to Israel and warned against reducing the movement to a fund-raising body.

After middle age, many people worry about such illnesses as heart and kidney disease, diabetes, high blood pressure and cancer. They often interpret quite innocuous signs as symptoms of one of these serious diseases. Instead of brooding until ill health really develops, a visit to a doctor would set the worried mind at rest or permit early treatment of any disease that is present.

Put Seagram's "83" to the water test. For water (plain or sparkling) is your most reliable guide to the whole truth about any whisky. Water adds nothing, detracts nothing, but reveals a whisky's true, natural flavour and bouquet.

Elath Looks Odd In N.Y. Harbor

The strange silhouette of the newly acquired Israel-America Line freighter Elath baffled many waterfront watchers as she sailed down the harbor on her first trip from New York to Haifa.

Ship-wise persons perhaps recognized her as a shelter deck-type vessel. Her straggling 510-foot length is punctuated by two dropped decks, one just behind the bow and the other forward of the stern. Fully loaded she gives the impression of three separate sections in the water. Her forty-eight crewmen live in two housings on the main deck. Surmounting all this is a fifty-eight-foot smokestack that looms up like a huge white tower.

The thirteen-knot, 12,500-dead-weight-ton steamship has six hatches. In an unusual arrangement, each hatch is flanked by two wing hatches. These give access to the sides of the hold and facilitate loading and unloading cargo.

The vessel, which was too long to tie up at the line's regular dock at Pier 37 on the East River, was berthed at Seventeenth Street, Brooklyn, N.Y. Visitors at a reception saw interior woodwork, marble fixtures, glass saloon doors and inscriptions that tell of her German origin. She was launched as the Treuenfels at Wasermunde in 1926, captured by the British during the war and purchased for Israel-flag service in Liverpool earlier this year.

A feature of the reception was the presentation of a ship's library to Capt. Eliezer Chodorov. The Hebrew, Yiddish, and English volumes were donated by the National Committee for Labor Israel. Among the books was a Hebrew translation of Herman Melville's "Moby Dick," which was specially requested by the seamen.

Captain Chodorov, an Israeli, as are all of the line's masters, has been shipping out of Palestinian ports for twenty-four years. The short, wiry, 47-year-old Polish-born skipper sailed under Jewish flags long before the founding of the new nation.

During World War II, he served under many flags. His most exciting feat was taking a salvaged German freighter from Eritrea to Haifa with a skeleton crew and no navigation instruments under wartime conditions. In 1948, with the outbreak of hostilities in the Near East, he was named to command the first Israeli Warship. He later returned to the merchant service as master of the Galilah, which carried 50,000 immigrants to Israel.

The captain spoke of the satisfaction he felt towards his new command. "The only untoward incident," he laughed, "was when a Galveston newspaper referred to my Hebrew conversation with a rabbi there as speaking Arabic."

The Elath is the fifth ship to enter the Israel-America Line's service between Israel and the United States. Raphael Recanati said that no definite policy had been decided on further acquisitions. He is general manager of the line and of the American-Israeli Shipping Company, which acts as agent in New York. The war in Korea, he said, has underlined Israel's need for her own vessels.

There has been a great demand for grain for Israel, and most ships are laden with that commodity on eastbound voyages. The Elath was loaded with 11,200 tons of wheat in her holds as well as general cargo, including pre-fabricated houses for new settlements.

Center Movement Grows in Israel

Following the successful lead of the Jerusalem YM-YMHA, communities in other sections of Israel are establishing Jewish Community Centers and YM-YWHAs to form the beginnings of a nationwide movement. This was reported by Louis Kraft, general secretary of JWB's National Council and secretary of the World Federation of YMHAs and Jewish Community Centers, in a statement on his six-month visit to Israel.

A YM-YWHA building has been completed in Ramat Gan and a Center program is already in operation. Other Center programs have already been started in Tel Aviv and Safed, while still others are being planned for Natanya and Petach Tikvah. Mr. Kraft reported that the Jerusalem YM-YWHA has the second largest membership of any organization in the city, and that it has proven so popular that its capacity of 600 is reached within a half hour after the building is opened in the evenings. Schools close at noon in Jerusalem, and students spend the rest of the day at the Y, playing games, reading, doing their homework, engaging in a number of other activities, or just chatting with their friends.

Friendship clubs, special interest groups, and mass activity programs are available for the adult and intermediate divisions, and these activities will be adapted to the age level of the junior division, now in its infancy. Special interest areas for the 18 and-older group include movie criticism, chess, contemporary Jewish history, Palestinography, dramatics, singing, music appreciation, and discussion. For those 15 to 18 years of age, there are dramatics, social and folk dancing, gymnastics, boxing, crafts, English, contemporary Hebrew literature, and music appreciation. In the evenings, there are cultural, recreational and social activities, such as concerts, dances, parties, quiz nights, meetings, camp fires and outings.

Miss Florence Schrout, Y executive director, now has a part-time staff helping her, in addition to specialists who come in once or more a week to conduct various special interest activities. The part-time staff includes: Asher Hoek, a graduate of the New York School of Work, director of activities; Yitzhak Ackerman, head, intermediate division, and Beracha Ben Zvi, junior division head. Mr. Kraft reported that, while a well-rounded Center program is in operation, space and facilities are exceedingly limited, and there is an urgent need for additional books, recordings, games, athletics gear, and furniture. He added that a site for a building — located in the St. Simon section of the city — has been given to the Y by the Government. Mr. Kraft was a visiting lecturer in welfare work at the School of Social Work in Jerusalem and, in addition, taught courses in social agency administration. He served as consultant to the Y and assigned five social work students there for their field work.

Israeli Minister Once Dug Ditches

David Remez, Israeli Education Minister, who died in Tel Aviv at the age of 64, was buried in the village of Zichron Yaakou, near Haifa, where he had dug ditches and drilled wells as a laborer after his arrival in the country from Russia thirty-seven years ago.

All Government work was suspended and schools were closed throughout the country at 10 a.m. The Minister's body, draped in a prayer shawl and the national flag, was removed by Cabinet Ministers, President Chaim Weizmann's representative, and Knesset members from the Education Ministry in Jerusalem where it had lain in state all night.

School children lined the streets of Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Ramleh and villages and work camps along the 110-mile route. They dipped black-draped Israeli flags as the coffin went by. One hundred and fifty vehicles were in the procession.

Thousands of mourners attended a service outside the offices of the Federation of Labor (Histadrut), where Mr. Remez had worked as secretary general for thirteen years.

The clean-up campaign is over and I can relax again and tend my own garden. I thoroughly enjoyed being one of the judges of the beautification competition as it took me into many gardens I had enjoyed from the street. We found the winner of the contest cleaning up his glad corms for planting while we were doing the judging. Remember to treat your corms for thrips before you plant them if they were not dusted with DDT last fall.

Rustic Fences

The prize for the most attractive fence went to one made from small cedar poles. It fitted into the garden landscape beautifully and was particularly well made. You may be interested in copying the pattern used.

Another novel idea noticed during my rounds was a method of making a flower pot fit a jardiniere. The rim of the pot was too big to fit into the container. So, by using a hack saw, the rim was quickly and easily removed allowing the pot to be completely hidden by the jardiniere.

Shadow Boxes

One of my regular ports of call is a small dairy. I can always count on picking up several butter boxes in good condition for my stock pile beside my work bench. There seems to be no end to the things that can be made from butter boxes, orange crates and nail kegs. I have promised to make a small shadow box for our living room on the next rainy Saturday. The pattern to be used is shown. By carefully puttying the joints before it is painted a serviceable box can be made quite inexpensively.

Anchors Aweigh

Now that the outdoor living room will be in use again, try your hand at making this large serving tray with a nautical theme. You will find it light, attractive and sturdy.

THE LITTLE PADRE

"I'd like you to help but I doubt if you can."

"I'd like to try," I said, with a feeling that he wanted something not catered for in the stretcher-bearer's handbook. Then he told me. Apparently the Jews have a special requiem they say for the dead, a Kaddish or something they call it, and that day was the anniversary of the death of a younger sister of Ben's in an air raid.

"I see, Ben, you want someone to say this prayer for you. I'd be only too glad to do it, if I knew what it was and where to find it, but that would be a tough proposition in a place like this."

"It's tougher even than that," Ben said with a bitter laugh. "You didn't learn Hebrew all your life, Syd, so I should think it's too late now." Then he added: "I can't say I worried about these things in the past, only now, not being able to see anything else, I feel I'm seeing God all the time."

"If you don't have this Kaddish said for you it's going to be hard, is it, Ben?"

He turned his head towards me, his forehead red like fire. "It's going to be hard, Syd."

"Don't believe that hypocritical nonsense." It was Wally calling shrilly. "Don't believe him, Syd. If he cared that much for his religion he would have known the thing by heart. Even I know the Lord's Prayer and a few others, though I haven't said them for ten years. Ben's demanding preferential treatment, like all his clan; as bold as brass when they're all right, blubbering if they get hurt."

I looked fiercely at Wally. This sort of thing helped nobody, and Ben was fretting.

"Stop it, Wally," I told him sharply. "That sort of talk comes very well from you. There are padres to look after you, and fellows of like mind, and if you're against religion, well, there are plenty of others just the same. But from now on who's Ben got to understand what he's driving at and to remember the things he remembers? No one but himself, and it's bloody lonely."

"Look here," Wally protested, "we jumped out of the same plane, fell into the same packet of trouble, got hurt in the same way and finished up in the same stinking hole. Now he's trying to find ways of proving he's different from me. Why should he start moaning for things he can't have? Let him be reasonable, Ben's no better than us!"

"I do know the Kaddish by heart, Wally. Only I want to hear someone say it to me. When you love a woman you like to tell her so, but you want it to come from her lips too, don't you?"

"I don't know, I've never loved a woman."

"Loving a woman is just like loving God, Wally."

Evening began to pass across us, and all was quiet. The Italian staff had left the hospital; a new guard mounted sentry and leant lazily back, dreaming his own dreams; for the time being even the sky was empty of its interminable aeroplanes. But I kept thinking of what Ben had said. He seemed to me like a missionary suffering his last moments. I looked out to the darkening vista of Benghasi.

Johnny, carrying a thin black book, came running back so swiftly he was practically upon us before I noticed him. This time of the day he was usually at home. Now he stood beside Ben, opened his book and began reading. None of us spoke, nor could we understand a word, of course, but Ben could, and trembling, he took the little fellow's brown hand in his. It all took about a minute and slowly he came out, his face puckered, and he stood with me as we gazed at each other, the only two who saw. Johnny passed his hand over his face, not to cry, but to indicate his thoughts to me. I knew what he meant. The word Kaddish had been his clue, otherwise he could only tell by a person's eyes. And because poor Ben was blind he had not been able to tell that he, too, was a Jew.

Wally suddenly spoke, a voice gentler and more human than I'd ever heard from him.

"Well, well," he said, "Ben's little padre."

Then all was peace again and silence. Over to the west I watched the sun setting behind the world on the other side of Benghasi.

Urge Leaders In Italy To Aid Survival Of Group

With 39,000 Jews remaining in Italy today, Jewish leaders look sadly and helplessly at the empty Renaissance synagogues and contemplate melancholy communities decimated by the war and daily shrinking through intermarriage or out-right conversion. The small Jewish community is so divided today with 12,000 in Rome; 6000 in Milan; 2000 in Turin; and the balance residing in Venice, Florence, Leghorn, and smaller towns, it is difficult for them to keep up even the semblance of an organized communal life.

Superimposed on this basic problem of cultural survival is the more threatening question of physical existence. The ghettos of Rome, Leghorn and Venice envelop a desperately poor and indigent Jewry. It is in this setting that ORT (Organization for Rehabilitation through Training) has initiated an extensive program. During recent visits Dr. Aron Syngalowski, Chairman of the World ORT Executive, and Dr. Sonnabend, director of organization, publicity and finance, of the World ORT Union, made eloquent appeals to the wealthier segments of Italian Jewry to help provide the moral and financial assistance required by the ambitious ORT program. Pointing out that, while outside aid will be required for a long time to come, it is imperative that the Jewish community accept the responsibilities necessary for their own survival, Dr. Sonnabend explained that with the closing of the DP camps, Italian Jewry was entering upon a new phase of economic rehabilitation.

With some 1200 students already enrolled in ORT schools, the Federation of Jewish Communities, representing Zionist organizations and Jewish youth bodies, have shown a great deal of interest in extending the ORT program. Conducted with a good deal of success so far are the courses in dental mechanics, typewriter repair, needle trades, glass blowing and cutting, radio, agricultural-mechanics and other trades. The ORT center at Grottaferrata, the home for convalescent tubercular DP's under IRO auspices, has added a course in advanced dental mechanics for last term's graduates.

The Administrative Committee of Italian ORT which met in Milan resolved to extend the program to all Italian cities where there is a Jewish community of any importance. With the firm intention of gaining wider support for the vital work of vocational training of Italian Jewish youth, ORT Leaders in Italy are making a concerted effort in this direction. The American ORT Federation, principal contributor to the worldwide training installations maintained by the ORT Union, currently receives a subvention through special agreement with the Joint Distribution Committee, a member agency of the United Jewish Appeal.

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

Maintaining The Vision

Moses, the greatest of leaders, did not have an easy time with our biblical ancestors. Holy writ records that the people placed many obstacles in the path of their leader. The Bible again records condemnations of the people because they failed to understand and appreciate Moses. Whenever a problem presented itself the people lacked the vision to tackle that problem and instead they attacked the leader. Moses kept the vision and was unyielding in his loyalty to ideals and to his God.

We imagine, therefore, that Aaron, the brother of Moses, was the more popular man for he yielded to the people and gave them a golden calf. The great leader of Israel, realizing that his task was onerous, therefore, by divine inspiration selected unto himself seventy elders to help him lead the people from slavery to freedom. But scripture records that out of these seventy only two remained to prophesy while sixty-eight were not constant in their prophecy. They only prophesied for a while and "they did so no more." (Numbers, Chapter 11:25). Only Eldad and Medad were constant in their prophecy and kept their vision.

The tragedy with life is that all of us at some time have visions and dreams but fail to maintain our vision. We do not possess the capacity to hold on to our ideals. What man or woman is there who has not in his or her youth dreamt of the higher and the finer? But, then, with the march of years something has happened and the vision has faded away. In our personal lives, whether we are in professions or business, we had hours of vision, in particular in the days of our youth.

All of us can look back to such noble hours. We said as we pursued our studies in medicine that we should not be mere mediocre doctors but should follow the pattern of a great Osler. But, then, life did something to us, and we remained in the category of the average physician. We studied law and jurisprudence and hoped to follow in the footsteps of a Brandeis and a Marshall but something happened and we became mere fee-collectors. In our youth we had dreams to battle for the right and truth and to give our all in championing righteousness. Yes, then we had glimpses of goodness and beauty and we marvelled at works of art and music of spheres.

But, what happened? Our visions faded and we became mere conventional drudges, living corpses, and prisoners of the body, of our passions and our pleasures. How well may we cry with the Psalmist of old, "Bring my soul out of prison." Behold, the men and women who are imprisoned by their possessions, their homes, their wealth. Behold, the men and women who are prisoners of habits and not masters of their souls. Behold, the men and women who are prisoners of the closed mind. Their minds are locked to new ideas. They cry, "Let well enough alone."

Yet, the hope of the world rests with the Eldads and Medads who prophesy constantly and who maintain the vision amidst all circumstances and conditions. Roland Hayes, the great Negro singer, kept his vision. Though he knew well that as a coloured man his chance in the world of art and music was a precarious one, he feared not. He recalled the admonition of his coloured teacher who urged him ever to keep his heart right and his spirit divinely disciplined, then no one in all the world would ever be able to hurt him. This is the secret of Hayes' great achievement in the realm of music. He kept his vision.

Recently, Dr. Edward Condon, head of the United States Bureau of Standards, had come under severe attack by the modern witch-hunters who seek to assassinate the character of men of great stature and nobility. Dr. Condon has kept his vision and bore with dignity the attacks upon him. A group of a hundred and twenty-six scientists tendered a dinner to Dr. Condon, testifying to his leadership and to his dedication to the highest. He told those present that it is not really as hard to bear the attacks as some might imagine "because it brings out so vividly a realization of how very many decent people there are in the world."

If nations had only kept their vision, what a finer world all of us would now be living in! All of us recall that in 1918 the leaders of nations had a vision of a League of Nations. People then throughout the world rejoiced that at last the hour had arrived when war would be no more and nations would beat their swords into plough-shares. But, then, this vision faded and we only learned in World War II that World War I was a prelude to the second world struggle, in which millions gave their lives to save civilization.

Following World War II there was built the United Nations with its vision of the One World! But what is happening to our One World? Behold, how the Big Powers are again guilty of double-mindedness in their dealings with the little peoples of the earth! What hope is there for an enduring peace? Must mankind once more suffer tragedy and must our civilization be threatened to annihilation by atomic power? God forbid!

Man has yet a chance to save himself and his world from complete destruction. If only the leaders of nations and peoples everywhere would maintain the vision and translate that vision into resoluteness that the One World must now be firmly built upon the foundations of the Judaeo-Christian tradition and thus the Kingdom of God may be speeded upon earth.

Boy Scouts Of Casablanca Report On Village

As soon as we had set up camp, Sam and Ricker went to the village of Ouled Hakka, about one kilometer away, to have the first look at it. They arrived just in time for "Minha" and took the opportunity to worship with the villagers. The streets were filthy, the children were dirty and tattered. Most of them suffered from trachoma.

At six o'clock in the morning on Wednesday we are in the village where people are early risers. We worship with them and then inspect the homes, where we give advice to the mothers about keeping their homes and their children clean. The houses are dirty and without any ventilation, refuse is all over, and one smells the odor at a distance. In almost every house there is at least one person needing care. Before we leave, we demand that everybody be clean in the afternoon and threaten to refuse milk to those who are not washed. We also reproach them for the disgusting condition of the streets and for the complete lack of hygiene in the village.

We have lunch at the camp and an hour later are back at the village, making a new inspection. Everything seems transformed. No more refuse around, in every home mother and child are clean. While we prepare the milk, other Scouts engage in decorating the synagogue. At four o'clock the milk is ready and all the children, cups in their hands, stand in line in front of the synagogue to receive their ration. Next are the aged, and finally we distribute the rest to mothers who want some. Nobody is left out, everybody drinks with evident pleasure because we took care to sweeten the milk. After the distribution, we keep the children at the synagogue for a while and teach them a few Hebrew songs. Afterwards they leave happy, their big, expressive eyes shining with gratitude.

At seven on Thursday morning we are in the village and until eight o'clock we distribute milk. Again we make visits and find that the houses are cleaner even than the day before. A change is felt everywhere. Even the surroundings seem to have changed; they are healthier, purer, it seems that one can breathe more freely, that life is more beautiful. The Rabbi tells us so as soon as he sees us.

We finish decorating the synagogues which are really nice now. The streets are dusty but clean. No rubbish. All animal waste has disappeared as if by magic. We then tackle the social problems. The men, heads of familes, repeat that they have done nothing to improve their living condition because they want to go and settle in Israel. We explain to them that, on the contrary, they have to improve it if they want to be able to go.

We proceed to the election of a committe of six persons: two will be in charge of the hygienic conditions, two of the streets, and two of other various problems. The villagers put forth some of their wishes: The poor ask for financial aid, in a village where even the "rich" have a hard time making both ends meet. They ask for a physician, because the mortality rate is high and they have no means to pay the fees of a doctor from Marrakech. They ask for some instruction in French. After the meeting we distribute the rest of the food.

The next morning at six o'clock we return to the village and at seven we board our truck. The entire population, with tears in their eyes, comes to bid us farewell, asking us to come back. We are also deeply moved. It is a pity that we had only three days.
